Best Reviewer of the March-April 2023 issue - Leila Rashki Ghaleno

Leila Rashki Ghaleno

I hold a Ph.D. in reproductive biology and have worked as a researcher at Iran's Royan Institute's Sperm Biology Department (ACECR) since 2008. My research interests include oxidative stress, sperm cryopreservation, and testis tissue engineering. I have twenty-three peer-reviewed scholarly articles and over thirty abstracts presented at national and international conferences. I am an International Journal of Fertility and Sterility (IJFS) reviewer and the author of seven (in Persian) books, as well as the recipient of the Student Book of the Year Award for "Human Sperm Cryopreservation" (2020) and the 40th Iran's Book of the Year Award for "Laboratory Aspects of Infertility Treatment" (2023).

"Being a reviewer for the Urology Journal is an honor because it allows you to contribute to the journal's scientific level. Evaluating scientific articles with care and objectivity is a significant intellectual contribution and a rewarding duty in academia. Peer review is an essential step for every journal since it allows for the publication of original research that meets the highest quality requirements".
